Madeline was immensely proud of her daughters, Holly and Robyn. They were the center of her world, and she spoke of them with constant love and admiration. She was generous in ways both big and small: always thinking of others and always looking for ways to show care. One of her most endearing habits was saving newspaper clippings or articles that reminded her of someone she loved, quietly letting them know, "I thought of you." Madeline's thoughtfulness, warmth, and devotion to her family will be deeply missed, and her memory will continue to live on through the love she so freely gave.
